"Context" means all the circumstances, conditions, facts, or things around a situation or action. How might context change the way we think about someone's behavior?

Should context change how we think about someone's behavior?

How can you fairly hold someone accountable for their behavior?

Family Fun!

Music can be a powerful tool for learning more about your family members. Music can remind us of people, places, events, or feelings that are important in our own lives. Music can also inspire us for the future. As a family, create a playlist of music that holds special meanings for you. It is not important to find music that everyone likes. It is important that everyone is allowed to contribute. Talk about how each piece of music relates to your family's context.

Were you surprised by any of the suggestions from your family members? What did you learn about your family through this activity? What did you learn about yourself?
